

↔ Influence runs both ways: each layer shapes, and is shaped by, the others.

What each ring holds

- | | | |
|-------------|--------------|-------------------------------------|
| agent-group | individual |  Individual model |
| | | the agent at the center |
| | interactions |  Microsystem |
| | | settings it acts in directly |
| governing | institutions |  Mesosystem |
| | | links between those settings |
| | |  Exosystem |
| | | settings that shape it from outside |
| | |  Macrosystem |
| | | law, markets, norms, culture |

The wedge is a cutaway: one model becomes a group, then a society, then many institutions interacting.

After Bronfenbrenner (1979); brackets show the three layers of Fig. 2.
